

Of Interest to Women

AGAINST SUFFRAGE BAR

PURPLE AND GREEN

Some Women Oppose Mrs. 'Gus' Ruhlin's Saloon Methods.

Mrs. 'Gus' Ruhlin, of Brooklyn, working with all her might for woman suffrage, has quite innocently and unintentionally raised a tempest in the suffrage ranks. Mr. Ruhlin, who used to be a prizefighter, runs a saloon at No. 1490 Myrtle avenue, and when Mrs. Ruhlin decided that she wanted to vote it seemed to her the most natural thing in the world to open a suffrage headquarters in her husband's place of business, where there was a large back room, just right for meetings. "Gus" was agreeable, so the front window of the saloon blossomed out with a sizable yellow sign, reading:

"Votes for women. Headquarters of the 2nd Assembly District of the Woman Suffrage Party. Mrs. Gus Ruhlin, chairman."

Mrs. Ruhlin is young and energetic, and

These Two Colors Combine with White on the New Hats.

It is surprising what modest little things the new autumn hats are! New ideas there are in shapes, materials and trimmings, but only in the few models that have indulged in futile attempts to imitate the tower of Babel is there anything startling. No doubt there must be some absurdities each season to give occupation to persons, who, knowing little or nothing about the modes, find their chief amusement in ridiculing them.

One recognizes an echo of the coronation in the quantity of purple displayed in the milliners' shops—and in other shops as well. It is a deeper, richer shade than one sees in the spring, or it is made to look so by the way it is used. It is often combined with white, and the effect of this is naturally very different from that of the purple and brilliant red mixtures of the earlier season.

Another color that is seen is a good deal with white is green in shades that are rather light and brilliant without seeming too obtrusive. No doubt the alliance with white is in part responsible for the attractiveness of this color also. There is, however, as much of a craze at present for double-faced effects in hats as in coats, and some of the prettiest of them are to be seen in hats of rough green felt lined with white felt.

A growing fondness for combining dark blue and purple may be observed. This is a thing that the conventional or timid woman would never have dreamed of doing on her own initiative, but when the right shades are chosen there is no questioning the charm of the result. One hat that is trimmed with a big bow of dark blue satin ribbon, the edge and reverse side of which are of purple corded silk.

Among the new trimmings are macramé lace. These are applied flat on the crown of some of the white felt hats and are also used on contrasting colors. A little white felt hat with no trimming but a circle of macramé motifs around the crown and some tiny ornament to give a touch of color is extremely smart, but not to be acquired by every woman who may have a fancy for it. With such simplicity a perfection of shape is necessary that is not always easy to find even when the matter of price need not be considered.

THE WEIGHT OF HATS.

An English investigator has taken the trouble to compare the relative weight of masculine and feminine headgear, and finds that while man's maximum is seven ounces a woman's is two pounds.

The average weight of a man's silk hat was found to be seven ounces, while, as made by the best firms, it weighs slightly less.

The popular derby weighs four and one-half ounces to five and one-half ounces, and the soft hats and sporting hats about three and one-half or four and one-half ounces.

The lightest hats worn by women weigh almost as much as the heaviest worn by men. A tweed hat with a bird perched on one side weighs six or seven ounces, while a plimpton toque weighs seven ounces and a sable one nine, other furs being much heavier. Large hats are not heavy in proportion to their size, as an effort is made to construct them of light materials, but they are much heavier than small ones. A big beaver hat trimmed with embroidery weighed twelve ounces.

A large picture hat of black velvet, although five feet and a half in circumference, weighed only fourteen ounces. Another of equal circumference, waving with graceful plumes, tipped the scale at over a pound and one weighted with a fur creature weighed two pounds. The more expensive hats were found to be lighter in proportion to their size than the cheaper ones.
